

TOP TIPS

- Always keep your eyes and ears open for things that might make a good starting point for dramatic exploration.
- Take risks, try things out, and be prepared to learn from things that don't work out the first time.
- Make notes in your diary about how you are linking different ideas, experiences and knowledge together.
- The more plays you read and go see the more your understanding and appreciation of drama will grow.
- Extra marks are awarded to pupils who use the correct terminology in their exam, so learn the correct words.

Remember: Drama is an art form. It tries to understand the world by looking at it in new ways.

There is never just one right answer.

Your creative ideas about how a play might be staged and what it might mean will be valued.
